About the Center for Vital Longevity

The Center for Vital Longevity is a world-renowned research institute dedicated to understanding and promoting cognitive health across the lifespan. Our mission is to identify the brain markers that predict healthy aging and to develop interventions that prevent or slow cognitive decline. Our faculty includes some of the most highly cited researchers in the field, and our work is shaping the future of neuroscience and aging.

TI Alumni Association Max Post Memorial CVL Student Support Fund

Graduate students are essential to the center's mission and research. These exceptional individuals are selected from among the most promising young scientists in the country. They work alongside our faculty on groundbreaking studies that advance our understanding of memory, brain development and aging, and neurodegenerative disease.

Your gift of any amount will support the stipend of a graduate student, allowing them to fully focus on their training and research and accelerating their development as the next generation of leaders in cognitive aging science.
